1

One controlled shake-up

basis: Stability

Deliberately change the environment of one routine decision this month (different time, place, or format) and log whether the outcome improved. Flexibility protects your stability from becoming ...

2

Two-week shelf

basis: Patience

Pick one idea you are excited about and put it on a two-week shelf before acting. Review it at day 14 and decide with the full written picture in front of you.

3

Decision journal Fridays

basis: Reflection

Every Friday this month, review your week's decisions and tag each as pattern-following or pattern-breaking. You will see your own loops faster than any questionnaire.

Data Provenance & Method

How this snapshot was generated

What this is

Your birth date and time are converted to one UTC timestamp. A deterministic hash (SHA-256) seeds a fixed statistical model that maps it to seven decision dimensions, a risk-intuition position, and short-term action steps. The same input always produces the same snapshot.

What this is NOT

This is not a prediction. It is not based on any belief system, and no planetary or sign-based influence is involved. The correlations are statistically weak: they describe decision patterns for reflection, they do not forecast outcomes, and they claim no causal link between birth time and behavior.

Honest limitations

Scores are relative pattern estimates on a 0-100 scale, not measurements of any real event. Use this as an evidence-based prompt for self-observation, not as a verdict about who you are.

DISCLAIMER

Statistical weak-correlation analysis of your birth timestamp. Not medical, psychological, legal, or financial advice. For consequential decisions, consult a qualified professional.
